

a place of mind
THE UNIVERSITY OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Student Accommodations

Students with unique learning or accessibility needs are encouraged to work with the Centre for Accessibility to tailor their support for a successful learning environment. If learning accommodations are recommended by the Centre for Accessibility, the student should provide documentation to Midwifery Student Services and each Course Lead at the start of each term.

Students who experience personal or emotional challenges can access help from faculty members, the program lead, Midwifery Student Services, Indigenous Student Coordinator, or the Midwifery Program Director. Students are strongly encouraged to make use of UBC's Counselling Services in the case of emotional or psychological distress.

Students who need medical attention can find help at Student Health. Students with special needs (e.g., health care appointments), should plan them well in advance with their assigned preceptor or tutor. If in the clinical setting, students must also take responsibility for informing clients if they will not be available. Students should inform preceptors and tutors of any problems that might affect clinical or academic performance. The preceptor should not be expected to be responsible for problem solving or making accommodations unless requested by the Program.

Policy 73 Student Examination Accommodations Procedure from the Faculty of Medicine outlines the process for students to receive accommodations for exams.

Additional UBC Resources for supporting student success:

<https://students.ubc.ca/academic-success>

<http://thrive.ubc.ca>

<https://students.ubc.ca/ubclife>